SUMMARY

Synopsis of Bill

Senate Joint Memorial 91 (SJM 91) urges the U.S. Congress to provide thirty-four million two hundred thousand dollars ($34,200,000) for planning and construction of a public safety complex for the Shiprock and Crownpoint communities. It further directs that the memorial be given to the New Mexico Congressional delegation.

Significant Issues

The Indian Affairs Department reports.

The Navajo Division of Public Safety has over 700 employees who provide services in the following areas: law enforcement, criminal investigation, corrections, highway safety, and fire and rescue. Eighty-six percent (86%) of Division funds are from external sources such as federal funding, while fourteen percent (14%) of Division funds are from Navajo Nation General Funds.

According to the Navajo Nation Division of Public Safety statistics, Navajo Nation law enforcement make over 38,000 arrests annually, nearly 1,000 of which are major crimes, yet Navajo Nation detention facilities have bed space for only 103 inmates. Navajo Nation detention facilities have consistently operated at more than sixty percent (60%) above capacity. Due to limited detention facilities, the Navajo Nation criminal justice system is forced to release less serious criminal offenders back into communities in order to create more space for serious offenders.

In 2003, Congress approved a priority list of tribal detention facilities to be funded throughout Indian Country. According to this funding priority list, Navajo Nation would be funded for one detention facility in Crownpoint (ranked 9th) and another detention facility in Shiprock (ranked 11th). However, since FY 2003, federal funds have not been appropriated to construct these new detention facilities in Navajo Nation. As a result of lack of federal funding, Navajo Nation's public safety needs remain unmet.
